From Sikki to Stardom

Two Village Daughters Show
the World Their Talent

This is the inspiring story of Samba and Sangeeta, two ordinary women from Bettiah, Bihar, who turned their traditional craft into their greatest strength. Born in the soil of West Champaran, they once lived a simple life in the lanes of Barihani Tola and Champanagar. Their only resource was the magic of Sikki grass, but their dreams were big—to empower every woman in their village.

When Skill Became a Mission

The two women revived the traditional Sikki craft—used to make casserole baskets, tea coasters, bottle covers, and even bangles—and gave it a new identity. What was once limited to village homes is now in demand across India. At Delhi Haat, Sangeeta showcased their products for 11 days and proved that talent only needs a stage; recognition follows on its own.

From Villagers to National Trainers

Their hard work was recognized by the Patna Industries Department, which selected them as national and international trainers. Today, they train dozens of women in Gaunaha and nearby villages for 60 days, helping every household woman become self-reliant.

Bihar's Craft Goes Nationwide

Products made by Sangeeta and Samba now reach cities like Bhagalpur, Dehradun, Rishikesh, and several towns in Jharkhand. A craft that once belonged only to village soil is now admired across the country.

Where There is Will, There is a Way"

This is not just the story of two women, but of Bihar's women power, which creates unlimited possibilities even with limited resources.

Today, Sangeeta and Samba are not just crafting products—they are shaping the future of hundreds of women.

"When skill comes from the heart, there are no limits—only heights to reach."

Dehati to Disruptor:

How a Young Bihari Turned Soil into a ₹2.5 Cr Revolution

They called him "Dehati", but Prince Shukla, a 24-year-old B.Sc. Agriculture graduate from Bihar, is now transforming the future of Indian farming—one village at a time.

Prince once dreamt of a global academic journey. He had landed a job in Bengaluru and was preparing for a prestigious scholarship to Switzerland. But when the pandemic struck, everything came to a halt. His plans collapsed, and he returned home—disappointed, directionless, and unsure of what came next.

What he found back in his village changed his life forever.

Local farmers were struggling—trapped in outdated techniques, poor-quality seeds, and lack of access to modern tools. Most were caught in a cycle of low yield and deepening poverty.

That's when Prince made a bold move. With just ₹1 lakh borrowed from his father, he launched AGRATE—an agri-tech startup focused on empowering small and marginal farmers. His mission? To make high-quality seeds, drip irrigation systems, and eco-friendly fertilisers accessible and affordable. But he didn't stop there.

Prince began training farmers in grafting, multi-cropping, and sustainable practices—techniques that not only improved soil health but doubled their income. He even bridged linguistic barriers to help farmers in Odisha grow makhana, a crop traditionally associated with Bihar.

Of course, the journey wasn't easy. Prince was mocked, doubted, and dismissed—labeled a "Dehati" for leaving a corporate path behind. But with patience, persistence, and purpose, he turned that label into a badge of honour.

The soil I returned to isn't just growing crops—it's growing change," says Prince.

Today, from a small village in Bihar, Prince Shukla is redefining Indian agriculture—proving that innovation doesn't need a city skyline. It only needs a rooted heart and a rising vision.
